Innate Depression As A New Phenomenon

July 8, 2020

Innate depression is something that is closely connected with human thinking. In our test we mention that some people have typical or atypical type of thinking. Such differences are usually innate and can influence human behavior. But what does that actually mean? “Typical” in Typology means that the ITT of a person has an easy connection with their category.

Innate Depression. Why People Have It

What is category? And why it is important? Read about it here. People who have Typical ITT usually do not suffer from innate depression and don’t have emotional changes of mood, because their category is typical or classic for their ITT. The main plus here is that such people have clear life views. Also they have good memory and personality without contradictions in thinking and way of life. These people like comfort and to live in comfort conditions, because their thoughts are clear in relaxed atmosphere.

Therefore People With Typical ITT Don’t Have Depression

But what about atypical? Atypical means that the ITT of a person has an artificial connection with the category that is unusual for their type.

These people always try to stay in that image, and it resembles a habit from a childhood. It doesn’t mean that these people are sick, good or bad, but usually they are full of personal contradictions. These contradictions are regarding their way of life and personal values.

Atypical people may feel constant mood changes, bad memory, suffer from obesity. But the main minus is that they have a constant lifetime innate depression, because of atypical category.

For example, people who have Atypical ITT and who are patriots. These people say, that they live a simple life and they don't need huge salaries. They work hard and give everything to their Motherland. It looks like they are not picky at first sight. But if you look closer, you will notice, that sometimes they change their mind and want to live a rich life. They may spend all their money on expensive car, house, expensive food, expensive art objects, expensive clothes. And they like to change these clothes often. They should live a simple patriotic life, but at same time they want to live a wealthy life. What does that mean?

Atypical Have Contradictions Inside Of Their Thinking, Because Of Atypical Category, That Influences Their Thoughts All The Time

These people feel that contradictions, but they mistakenly think that all people around feel the same. When they are staying at home, their classical Type reminds of oneself. But in order to inhibit these feelings, Atypical try to go outdoors or do something new. These constant changes may lead to hidden depression. This is because these people don't want to hear the voice of their classical Type. This innate depression also may lead to obesity, because people who have depression prefer to eat a lot without a norm. Some of these people can be also alcohol addicted, smoke too much or use drugs.

As for the behaviour, they have almost the same behaviour no matter if they are patriots or not. These people like to talk about money, they spend a lot of money and they try find a lot of money. It may seem that they don't have any values except money. Very often they like to brag to others and show their wealth or advantage in something. In order to get more money and grow socially, some of these people may close their eyes on moral rules, which is usually considered to be their weakness.

These people are flexible and may not adhere to the same opinion. Therefore, all atypical types of people think about themselves and their own benefit more than others. Atypical people usually have a superficial judgment and humor. Their humor is also simple and superficial. This is not an insult, but a fact that is visible to people of the Typical type.

Atypical mistakenly seek a cure from depression, when they buy something new or expensive all the time.

Trying to find something new, some of these people can react normally to those people who have same-sex marriage or relationship or even like to spread this idea. Of course, we all know that this is considered normal nowadays. But some of Atypical people believe in such relationships as innate need of some people. And this is due to their constant changing mood.

All Atypical people like these words: "You need to get out of your comfort zone".

In case if a person has a feeling of constant discomfort and wants to change his or her category from atypical to typical, we will work later on private special courses that may help those people.
